CWMA Meeting

Monday June 29th - 7:00 pm

Scotch Thistle

Scotch thistle (Onopordum acanthium) has robust spiny leaves with white woolly hairs that give them a grey cast. The stem has spiny “wings” running down the stem. The leaf outline is egg shaped to narrow spatula shaped, but the general outline is interrupted by irregular spiny teeth along the leaf margin. Leaf length varies between 4 and 20 inches long, and the leaves are arranged in an alternate pattern along the stem. Flowers are arranged in heads, generally with one head per branch, but can range from 2 to 7 heads, with flower color ranging from white to purple. The stems and flower heads can persist through the winter making infestations detectable in the subsequent year. The seeds are spatula-like in shape with 4 to 5 angles and without hairs. Seeds are a mottled brown to nearly black.
